Worker dies at plywood company in Elixir

Published: 20 Sep 2026

Gwalior. A worker died at the plywood company Elixer located in Malanpur. If the worker had received timely first aid, his life could definitely have been saved. Other workers are angry over the worker's death.

According to information, Narayandas, son of Ghanshyam Das, aged 50, a resident of Jhansi, was working at the plywood company Elixer in Malanpur, which was built last year. On the evening of September 12, while working near the chips silo in the factory, Narayandas suddenly fell ill and collapsed at the workplace. During this time, he neither received medical assistance nor first aid from the factory management. When other fellow workers raised an alarm, the factory management barely took him to Birla Hospital in Gwalior, where Narayandas died during treatment.

Negligence of the factory management

Meanwhile, angry workers say that the management of the plywood factory Elixer was negligent in this case and did not provide any first aid. The factory management had no arrangement for first aid at all.

Attempt to suppress the matter

The Elixir plywood company management is now trying to cover up the case of worker Narayandas's death. They didn’t even inform the Malanpur police or senior administrative officials, which has caused a lot of anger among Elixir plywood workers. They have raised this issue with the Chief Secretary, Labor Minister, and Chief Minister.

Management's claim

Raman Poddar, the main person in charge of Elixir plywood, said that worker Narayandas fainted while working. First, we took him to Rising Hospital in Malanpur and then to Birla Hospital in Gwalior, but he had a brain hemorrhage. Poddar mentioned that Narayandas was a contract worker, so his full responsibility was with the labor contractor company Gayatri, and it was the labor contractor's duty to take care of the deceased worker’s benefits. Poddar also said that the company follows all safety precautions.
